Artist description 'Charles, Ray' Ray Charles Ray Charles Losing Hand (Charles Calhoun) Atlantic 1037 Ray Charles had only recently joined the roster of Atlantic Records when he waxed the mournful blues Losing Hand on May 17, 1953 with a New York session crew consisting of saxists Dave McRae, Freddie Mitchell, and Pinky Williams, bassist Lloyd Trotman, drummer Connie Kay, and guitarist Mickey Baker, whose slippery chords cascade downward like thick, murky molasses.. His sessions were like no other at Atlantic 'They were exciting, edifying, thrilling,' said Wexler.. 'He still was being recorded in the conventional way, like you'd record almost any single singing artist,' said Ray's late co-producer, Jerry Wexler.. Ray had yet to explode with his groundbreaking gospel/blues synthesis, although his impassioned vocal and two-fisted piano offered clues as to his immediate future.. ' Born in Albany, Georgia on September 23, 1930 but raised in Greenville, Florida, Ray Charles Robinson lost his sight as a child but gained a love for music—blues, boogie-woogie, jazz, country—that was unshakable.. 'We're talking about Ray Charles There were no downers I mean, there was never anything negative or worrying, because Ray Charles had the whole thing figured out from beginning to end. He left the state school for the blind at 15, his piano skills already formidable, and somehow made his way cross-country from Jacksonville, Florida to Seattle.. 'We got the backing musicians, we got the arranger Jesse Stone, we rehearsed, and so on.. Swing Time was experiencing financial difficulties in 1952, so Lauderdale peddled Charles' contract to Atlantic.. His first release was a hit and two more after that too, though his predilection for imitating Nat King Cole and Charles Brown hadn't been tamed yet.. There Ray would transform R&B with his daring gospel/blues synthesis on the smashes I've Got A Woman, Hallelujah I Love Her So, and What'd I Say (speaking of advancements in electric instrumentation, he played a Wurlitzer piano on the latter). e828bfe731 Download Microsoft Office For Apple Mac
